AT THE REFORM SCHOOL

The Boys Enjoyed Themselves Without Restriction.

Yesterday was a well-rounded holiday at the reform school. Col. Shallenberger, the superintendent, and Mr. Varney, the assist nt superintendent, with their aids, busied themselves in providing the boys with all that went to make up a very pleasant celebration. At 12 o'clock the boys—about 150 in all—sat down to a first-class Thanksgiving dinner. Every boy in the school was in the dining room and partook of stuffed turkey, mashed potatoes, celery, and other delicacles. When the meal was concluded the boys adjourned to the outer atmosphere and engaged in ball playing and other recreations. At supper they were treated to mince pies and apples in addition to the regular meal, and shortly before 7 o'clock went to the schoolroom, where Mr. C. P. Murray, of Capitol Hill, exhibited a number of stereopticon views, taking his audience on a trip to Japan and bringing them back safely. themselves in providing the boys with all

54. Chas. H. Boynton, son of the agent of the Western Associated Press in this city, is laid up at his father's residence on Seventeenth street, near L. northwest, from a fractured ankle received in a practice game of foot ball at Lehigh University last Tuesday. He is the quarter back of the Lehigh foot ball team, and his loss is much felt, by his fellow collegians, as he was an exceptionaty fine player and very popular. A displaton from Exclost, Pa., to the Fhiladelphia Press of yesterday morning says that the Lehigh men attribute their defeatly Lafayette College the day before in a large measure to the fact that Boynton, their atheled quarter back, was mable to play on account of his injured ankle.

OUR NATIONAL GUARD

MAKE AN ACCEPTABLE APPEARANCE ON THEIR FIRST PARADE.

Bad Weather Proves Something of Drawback - The Drill at the Washington Barracks Gives Satisfaction-Gen, Ordway Pleased With His Com-

Many of the National Guard went to bed early Wednesday night for the purpose of getting out in the ensuing morning two hours in advance of the usual time for ris ing. The first thing that was religiously observed on getting up was to look out and see how the weather was. A dark. threatening sky made things look very gloemy, and at once it was put down that the "field day" at the Washington barracks would get a set-back.

At 9 o'clock every armory in the District presented a busy scene of soldiers getting ready for the day's work. Happiness seemed to shine upon the faces of all, and jokes were hurien thick and fast at the trembling form of the young soldier who was to make his dirst appearance in public. The command to fall in was given at 9:30 sharp, and immediately seven battalions, numbering over 1:300 men, were on their way to the parade ground. The troops marched in good style along the streets, followed by large crowds of people, and not a few ladies aid their best to encourage the boys by waving handkerchiefs and bestowing smiles upon them. Gen, Gibson, commanding the barracks, was not to be caught napping, and, as the various companies entered the Four-and-shalf street gate, they were received by the battalion of artillery stationed there, drawn up in line, and at present arms. This made the District boys happy, and they came to a carry in response to the salute of the regulars. By 10:30 the entire organization was in line on the campus fronting the river. Gen, Ordway and staff, comprising A ljutant General Bigelow, Captains Clay and Gales, all mounted, arrived early on the come and saw to the alignment of the troops. okes were hurlen thick and fast at the

Just as the drills were about to be entered upon rain began to fall, and it looked for a time as if the hopes of all were to be dashed by this uncomfortable feature. Gen. Ordway, with his characteristic prompiness, ordered the drills to begin on time. In stantly the clear voice of Maj. Moore was heard giving the 33 battailon orders to march, and fn turn Capt. Dalton was seen putting the 1st lestailon in motion. In quick succession Maj. Urell, of the 24 battailon: Capt. Mills, of the 4th battailon. Maj. Fisher, of the 5th; Maj. Fleetwood, of the 6th, and Maj. Revells, of the 7th were following in the wake of the other commands. For one hour the several battailons were put through all manner of maneuvers. The hardest worked official was Adjutant General Bigelow, who was here and there directing, inspecting, and giving confidence by his presence. The great drawback to the casy movement of the troops was the unevenness of the grounds, and lie wet grass made it very unpleasant for marching. Another very great trouble was the manner in which the crowd insisted upon getting in the way of the soldiers. Instead of standing on the sidewalks they crowded the pathway of the march. It was a good-natured concourse of people, and one that was in sympathy with the militia. It comprised the parents, sweethearts, and friends of the boys.

The troops were not all in regulation uniform. The Emmet Guards, the Columbia Rilles, and Corcoran Cadets were pants of their company uniform. The various battailons wore the cap, pants, and leggings of the National Guard. There were quite a number in line without blouses, and citizens' coats were substituted. Taken collectively the appearance of the line was very satisfactory. To go into a criticism of the efforts of the soldiers would be unjust. It was not expected that they would exhibit the proficiency that should characterize a regular body of soldiers in an old militia organization. The Washington Light Infantry Corps was foremost in the drills, and choused by the companies of the columbi
